PREFACE (TO THIS EDITION)

This Greek-English Lexicon is a companion to the edition of the Septuagint edited by A. RAHLFS and published by the Württembergische Bibelanstalt, now Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft in Stuttgart. The present one-volume edition combines the revised text of the first part published separately in 1992, and the slightly reworked text of the second part published in 1996. The team of three editors remained unchanged. K. HAUSPIE deserves a special mention. She did most of the work, assisted by two students: S. S. SCATOLINI and I. DUBIANETSKAYA. F. VAN SEGROECK was once more most helpful as an expert proof-reader of the final text, and more specifically of the bibliography and of the Greek typesetting. A special word of thanks goes out also to A. TERNIER and J. HENNION for their technical assistance, and to all those that have contributed to the improvement of this lexicon.

Most of the revision work was concerned with the first volume. In several instances it had to be brought into line with the second volume, often in response to the suggestions and critiques made by users of the first. The main changes are outlined in the "INTRODUCTION".

The announced supplement, treating the variants mentioned in the apparatuses of the critical editions, is still in the planning stage. Samples of a second supplement, including the vocabulary of AQUILA, SYMMACHUS, and THEODOTION, can be found in ETL 74 (1998).¹ A tentative version of SYMMACHUS' special vocabulary in the Psalms has been published in the electronic periodical Textual Criticism, and waits for the remarks of its users.²

² J. LUST, A Lexicon of Symmachus' Special Vocabulary in the Psalms, in Textual Criticism 6 (2000) at <http://rosetta.atla-certr.org/TC/TC.html>.

Meanwhile, the Lexicon has been incorporated in The Bible Companion CD-ROM of the Gramcord Institute published by Bible Companion Software, and in the Accordance CD-ROM of the same Gramcord Institute, published by OakTree Software, Inc. An enriched German version of the hard copy is envisaged by the German Septuagint translation project.

The completion of the present volume would not have been possible without the support of its main sponsors: the Belgian “Fonds voor Wetenschappelijk Onderzoek”, and the “Onderzoeksfonds” of the K. U. Leuven. A special word of thanks is also due to the German Bible Society and its staff who smoothly handled any problems related to business and publication.

PREFACE

(TO THE FIRST VOLUME)

The present lexicon is a companion to the edition of the Septuagint edited by A. RAHLFS published by the Würtembergische Bibelanstalt, now Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft in Stuttgart. The authors would like to thank Dr. E.W. TUINSTRA, Translation Supervisor of the Dutch Bible Society (Nederlands Bijbelgenootschap), J. DE WAARD, Regional Translation Coordinator of the United Bible Societies, and Dr. S. MEURER, General Secretary of the German Bible Society (Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft), for having made this publication possible.

In composing this lexicon we have benefited from the advice and assistance of many others. First of all we are indebted to E. TOV (Jerusalem), R. KRAFT and J. ABERCROMBIE (Pennsylvania) who aroused our interest in the lexicography of the Septuagint and who encouraged us to start the project supporting us with their “Computer Assisted Tools for Septuagint Studies”. C.C. CARAGOUNIS (Lund) corrected the first print-outs and made valuable suggestions. The much appreciated cooperation of G. CHAMBERLAIN (Washington) is explained in the introduction. In our own university we were fortunate to have understanding colleagues who have offered constructive criticism. We are especially indebted to W. CLARYSSE of the Department of Ancient History, a specialist in papyrology, who offered helpful advice and provided us with useful complements to our own findings. In seminars several students assisted us with the initial efforts. Others helped with the typing of the manuscript: especially F. VAN GERVEN, G. HAUSPIE, E. JORIS. Special mention should be made of B. DOYLE who corrected the English, W. BOUCIQUÉ, and V. VANDERMEERSCH, specialists in classical Greek and the first regular collaborators to the project, and M. VAN ROOIJ an occasional collaborator.

The present team consists of J. LUST, Professor of Old Testament Exegesis and Septuagintal Studies in Leuven (Belgium), E. EYNIKEL, Professor of Old Testament Exegesis in Nijmegen (The Netherlands), K. HAUSPIE, specialist in Classical and Koine Greek, trained at the K.U. Leuven (Belgium). The team is assisted by A. CLAES (theologian and biblicalist of the K.U. Leuven) who took care of the CATSS database, and D. D'HUYVETTERS (classicist of the K.U. Leuven) responsible for the final layout.

The research for this work was facilitated by the availability of the excellent library of the Faculty of Theology and its helpful staff, and the library of the Departments of Classical and Oriental Studies. The project is supported by the Faculty of Theology and the “Onderzoeksfonds” of the K.U. Leuven, the Belgian “Nationaal Fonds voor Wetenschappelijk Onderzoek”, the Faculty of Theology of the K.U. Nijmegen, the Abbey of Westmalle, and the Dutch and German Bible Societies.

(TO THE SECOND VOLUME)

The second and final volume of this lexicon appears four years after the first. Like the first, it is the result of a team effort. At the end of this venture I wish to express my warmest gratitude to my assistant K. HAUSPIE for her sustained and outstanding work. She was responsible for the research on the Greek vocabulary of the second volume and for the coordination of the contributions of the other members of the team and of the external advisors. Together with my colleague E. EYNIKEL and myself, she was the engine behind the project.

Several collaborators to the first volume also made valuable contributions to the second: A. CLAES, D. D'HUYVETTERS, B. DOYLE, G. HAUSPIE, and E. JORIS. Among the new collaborators we mention J. PHILIPS and G. SINNAEVE. Special acknowledgement must be made of the generous efforts of our external advisors and correctors: the experts in matters of Greek language: W. CLARYSSE, C.C. CARAGOUNIS, and F. VAN SEGBROECK, and the specialists in Semitic languages: A. SCHOORS, M. ZIPOR, and J. COOK. With regard to the bibliography, the notes of P.-M. BOGAERT and the careful supervision of F. VAN SEGBROECK were of a great help.

In the introduction to the first volume we announced the publication of a separate volume listing all the verb forms and their lemmata. Taylor's Parsing Guide published in 1994³ made this work redundant. Meanwhile another supplement, treating the variants mentioned in the apparatuses of the critical editions, is in the planning stage. We are also working on a lexicon of AQUILA, THEODOTION, and SYMMACHUS. The successful completion of these additional projects largely depends on the generosity of sponsors such as those who have supported us up to now: the "Onderzoeksfonds" of the K.U.Leuven, the Belgian "Nationaal Fonds voor Wetenschappelijk Onderzoek", the Abbey of Westmalle, and the German Bible Society. A special word of thanks is due to J. LANGE, secretary to the administration of the German Bible Society, who kindly and smoothly handled any problems related to business and publication.

INTRODUCTION¹

I. IN GENERAL

A. Background and Need

Up to the present moment, the work of J.F. SCHLEUSNER, published more than a century and a half ago, constitutes the last lexicon specifically geared to the requirements of the Septuagint (henceforth: LXX).² Reprint editions of its five impressive volumes were published in Glasgow in 1822, and in London in 1829.³ Notwithstanding these reprints, surviving copies remain rare. While SCHLEUSNER was and remains a useful tool, it is, nevertheless, antiquated. Since its appearance, many new papyri have been discovered, the vocabulary of which sheds new light on several terms of the LXX, and numerous lexicographical studies have been produced which have refined our knowledge of biblical and Koine Greek. It should also be observed that J.F. SCHLEUSNER did not produce a lexicon of biblical Greek in the strict sense of the word, but rather a lexicon of biblical Hebrew.⁴

The lack of an up-to-date lexicon of the LXX was partly compensated for by the production of several good lexica in related fields. Reference should be made to G. LAMPE's dictionary of Patristic Greek, W. BAUER, W.'s lexicon of the New Testament (henceforth: NT), the UBS lexicon of the NT based on semantic domains, and MOULTON-MILLIGAN's vocabulary illustrated from the papyri, to be complemented with PRESIGKE-KIESSLING's lexicon of the Greek papyri. LXX scholars may also have recourse to LIDDELL-SCOTT-JONES' excellent comprehensive Greek dictionary.⁵ The latter constitutes the best general source of available information concerning the Greek language. Its Supplement, issued in 1968, palliates some of its deficiencies in the area of the LXX. Nevertheless, many shortcomings remain in this particular area. They are clearly indicated in reviews by W. BAARS and J. LEE, and in E. TOV's 1976 report on a lexicon of the LXX.⁶ In the Revised Supplement by P. W. G. GLARE⁷ (1996) many deficiencies of the Supplement of 1968 are corrected.⁸

The need for a new lexicon of LXX Greek has long been felt. In his Introduction to the OT in Greek, H.B. SWETE mentions that as early as 1895 a Cambridge committee had drawn up a plan for a new LXX lexicon.⁹ A decade later, A. DEISSMANN and M. MARGOLIS independently expressed the need for such a research tool. The latter provided us with some fine exploratory work and sample approaches related to LXX lexicography. His major preoccupation was with the refinement of the HATCH and REDPATH concordance which, according to him, was deficient in many respects. More recently, H. GEHMAN was asked to prepare a LXX dictionary. The plan was abandoned, however, when he was halfway through the work on the first letter of the alphabet. In a variety of ways, scholars like J.E. GATES, G.B. CAIRD, and G.D. KILPATRICK have been working on various aspects of LXX lexicography. Samples of their work and their proposals were collected by R. KRAFT in the first volume of Septuagint and Cognate Studies.

Following the initiative of its first president S. JELLOCOE, the International Organisation for the Septuagint and Cognate Studies (IOSCS), founded in 1968, agreed to sponsor a project to create a lexicon of the LXX. The dynamic forces chosen to steer the project were R. KRAFT and E. TOV. They were convinced that the only efficient and realistic way in which the problems of the undertaking could be approached was to establish a computer-generated base from which the necessary work of concordancing and sorting could be done. This resulted in the CATSS (Computer Assisted Tools for Septuagint Studies) enterprise. The lexicon project proper, however, did not get off the ground and seems to be dormant. In the sections on LXX lexicography in his more recent survey of studies on the LXX, E. TOV does not even mention the project any more.¹⁰ Meanwhile, in 1989 F. REHKOPF completed a vocabulary of the LXX¹¹ which is a simple tool intended to help students. It offers a one-word translation of all terms occurring in the LXX edition of A.

RAHLFS. Approximate information is added concerning the frequency of each word in the Old Testament (henceforth: OT) and the New.

Around the same period and independently of each other, more elaborate projects were launched by G. CHAMBERLAIN in the U.S.A., by T. MURAOKA, originally with J.A.L. LEE in Australia, and by J. LUST in Belgium. CHAMBERLAIN's concise dictionary was to comprise only those words that are not included in BAUER, W.'s New Testament Lexicon. Simultaneously, we started our work on a LXX lexicon in Leuven, in association with the CATSS project and using its computer-readable files. In 1991 G. CHAMBERLAIN decided to join our team but after the publication of volume I in 1992, he came to the conclusion that his views on the approach of making a lexicon and on its format were different from ours and he decided to continue working on his project on his own. In 1996 volume II was published. In 1986, T. MURAOKA launched his pilot plan intending to explore the concrete problems connected with LXX lexicography.¹² In 1993 he published his Lexicon of the Twelve Prophets.¹³ Comparisons between his approach and ours can be found in the contributions of M. VERVENNE¹⁴ and J. LUST¹⁵.

B. Contents

The Leuven lexicon project is associated with the CATSS project and uses its computer-readable files. With the exception of proper names, the lexicon covers all the words in A. RAHLFS' edition of the LXX.¹⁶ For practical reasons, words occurring in the critical apparatus, as well as the variants attested in the critical editions from Cambridge and Göttingen, are not systematically incorporated. They should be fully added in a later version. Proper names are included only when they are a transliteration of Hebrew words that are common nouns. Thus, it is noted, for instance, that בָּמָה in 1 Sm 9,12 stands for the Hebrew word בָּמָה, which means high place.

Each word is provided with morphological tagging. The grammatical abbreviations in this section are an adaptation of those used in the CATSS files.¹⁷ See "ABBREVIATIONS. II. Morphological Codes".

Drawing from the same CATSS files, the lexicon provides statistics informing the reader how often a word occurs in the respective books of the Greek Bible. For this purpose we classified these books in five groups of approximately the same size: the Torah, the Early Prophets including 1 and 2 Chronicles, the Later Prophets, the Writings without Chronicles, and those books which do not occur in the Hebrew Bible. A sixth figure gives the total. This classification of the books according to the Hebrew rather than the Greek canon implies that the Hebrew names are used and not the Greek (e.g., 1 Sm and not 1 Kgdms, or Neh instead of Ezr B 11-23). Since this may lead to some confusion on the part of the untrained student, we recommend the careful use of our list of abbreviations.

These statistics should offer a double improvement on X. JACQUES, Index des mots apparentés dans la Septante (Subsidia biblica, 1), Rome, 1972. First, X. JACQUES subdivides the Biblical books into four groups, following their sequence in A. RAHLFS' edition. In so doing, he mixes the Deuterocanonical books with the Protocanonical. Most of the Deuterocanonical writings were composed in Greek, not in Hebrew. The Greek vocabulary used in these books differs from that employed in the translation of the others. For statistical purposes it is better to keep them apart. Secondly, while X. JACQUES indicates whether or not a given Greek word is attested in one or more of his categories of biblical books, he fails to provide figures.

No attempt was made to separate the Deuterocanonical sections from the Protocanonical ones in books such as Esther and Daniel, nor to distinguish between those Deuterocanonical books that are, and those that are not based on Semitic originals.

The Lexicon further supplies up to five references to biblical texts in which a given word occurs, mostly in the order of their appearance.

These data are followed by one or more translation equivalents rather than by a description of the meaning. For each translation implying a new shade of meaning, a reference is given to an example. In addition to the translation equivalent, four categories of special cases may be indicated. First, verb forms or substantival adjective forms that deserve a special translation follow, mostly immediately, after the translation equivalents. Second, expressions that can be labelled as classical Greek, and word combinations that are less common or suitable in classical Greek but which are literal renderings of Hebrew idioms. Both groups are quoted literally from A. RAHLFS. Third, passages in which the Greek text may be corrupt. These cases are rare since A. RAHLFS mostly printed the corrected version. Fourth, passages in which the LXX differs from the MT, having either misread the Hebrew or read it differently, or having used a slightly divergent text. In categories two and three, the beginning of the discussion is marked with an asterisk (*) and a reference to the biblical passage is made. Exhaustiveness is not intended at this juncture. For a more detailed explanation of this approach, see the second part of this introduction.

When a word appears to be proper to the LXX and the literature depending on it, it is characterized as a neologism. If it occurs in the LXX as well as in the contemporary papyri and literature (beginning with POLYBIUS, 2nd c. BCE), it is also labelled as a neologism but a question mark is added. The label "neol." suggests then that the word in question was probably not used before the time of the composition of the LXX. It should be noted that this suggestion is rather tentative. Indeed, we do not know exactly when the respective books of the LXX were written. Moreover, it is hard to define the precise date of some other texts, especially of the inscriptions. These and other factors make it difficult to determine which of the LXX words can be classified as being neologisms with or without a question mark.

Bibliographical information is provided at the end of the treatment of each lemma. For each word, abbreviated references are given to lexicographical bibliography, when available. The fuller references are listed in the bibliographical list following upon the present introduction. Selections had to be made. With the exception of some publications that are exceptionally relevant for the OT, most of the works mentioned in TWNT are not included. Special attention has been given to authors such as G.B. CAIRD who seek to offer systematic corrections to the treatment of the LXX in LIDDELL-SCOTT-JONES. Numerous lexicographical contributions have been published in a number of periodicals, monographs, commentaries and volumes of collective essays. Our bibliographical list may help to rescue some of them from oblivion. Its compilation has been made possible thanks to the help of P.-M. BOGAERT.¹⁸

Finally, compound verbs are referred to under the simple form, but they are dealt with separately. When the simple form is not used in the LXX, it is listed without translation and without statistics, but with its prefixes. This should make it easier for the user to find etymologically connected verb clusters. Verbs of which the simple form does not exist are preceded by a hyphen (-) representing the prefix.

According to the original planning, the Lexicon was to be complemented with a separate volume listing all the verb forms and their lemmata, as a help for beginners trying to determine under which lemma they should look for the translation of a difficult form. The work of B. TAYLOR has in the meantime rendered the production of such a supplement superfluous.¹⁹

C. Methods and Justification

MT MT = Masoretic text

¹⁸ P.-M. BOGAERT graciously provided us with a copy of his valuable card index. Use was also made of E. TOV, Lexical and Grammatical Studies on the Language of the Septuagint, Jerusalem, 1975 (internal publication). We added our own findings to the provided data.

¹⁹ B. TAYLOR, The Analytical Lexicon to the Septuagint. A Complete Parsing Guide, Grand Rapids, MI, 1994.

The composition of a lexicon implies that several choices must be made, especially concerning the method to be followed. For practical reasons we have opted in favour of a dictionary offering translation equivalents rather than descriptions of meanings. It was decided also to present the lemmata according to their alphabetical order rather than to group them according to their meaning. This may not be the best approach for the composition of a more complete and final lexicon of the LXX. In the case of a more succinct lexicon, however, the arrangement adopted allows the user easier access to the meanings of the words found in the biblical text. In addition, without this approach, the realisation of the project within reasonable time limits and with restricted resources would have been impossible.

The limitation of the scope of the lexicon, covering the vocabulary of the LXX in A. RAHLFS' edition, was again guided by practical considerations. Together with E. TOV, we are convinced that the choice is justifiable.²⁰ It certainly offers the advantage of a clear demarcation. Moreover, its computerised form facilitates the generation of statistical data and results in a project that is of a reasonable size. In future editions, the vocabulary should be enriched with the variants attested in the manuscripts of the LXX.

The question of the inclusion of the vocabulary of AQUILA, SYMMACHUS, and THEODOTION is more complicated.²¹ First of all, it should be noted that they do not belong to the canon of the LXX. Furthermore, it is not always easy to define which words belong to the “Three”. It is also difficult to provide an adequate lexicographical description of the words used by AQUILA and καίγε-THEODOTION since these two revisers did not intend to give a translation in the traditional sense of the word.²²

The translation equivalents offered for each Greek word have resulted from the work done by an expert in classical and Koine Greek. Throughout our work, we have been particularly careful not to assign a Greek word all too quickly the meaning of its Hebrew counterpart, which was often J.F. SCHLEUSNER's procedure. As a rule, each occurrence of a word has been looked at in its immediate context with the help of the HATCH and REDPATH concordance and the text of A. RAHLFS' edition.²³ The work of LIDDELL-SCOTT-JONES has frequently served as our immediate guide, even though, occasionally, we have had to update its slightly archaic English. Special mention must be made of the frequently overlooked Supplement to the Lexicon of LIDDELL-SCOTT-JONES, first published in 1968. With the help of W. BAARS' review [VT 20 (1970) 371-379] we checked all the entries in the Supplement that give additional information about the use of a particular word in the LXX. The entries in question are to be found at the end of the treatment of the respective lemmata. The Revised Supplement, edited by P.G.W. GLARE (1996), has also been taken into account. In as far as possible, many cases have also been checked up against the Greek-Spanish lexicon of ADRADOS (presently covering all lemmata up to διώνυχος). For full references, see the general bibliography in the present volume. Special attention has been given to works providing information about the papyri, such as the lexicon of PREISIGKE-KISSLING, J.A.L. LEE's standard work on the Pentateuch, and G.H.R. HORSLEY's and S.R. LLEWELYN's studies.²⁴ This procedure has been strictly observed in the treatment of words that do not occur in the NT. Exceptions have been made for some very common words that are also attested in the NT, such as θεός. In these cases the lemma was construed with the help of BAUER, W.'s lexicon and the other lexica listed above.²⁵

Special cases were detected while checking the words in their context and with the help of the existing tools. They were divided into the four categories mentioned above. Much attention has been given to the instances in which the Greek seemed to differ from the Hebrew of the Masoretic Text (henceforth: MT). LXX Greek is first of all translation Greek. A lexicon of the LXX, therefore, should refer to the Semitic original, at least in those cases where the deviations between a Greek word and its Semitic equivalent can be explained at the level of morphemes, but also when the Greek words are incomprehensible because they are transliterations or because they have adopted the meaning of the underlying Hebrew or Aramaic words. A more detailed justification of this procedure can be found in the next chapter of this introduction entitled: "INTRODUCTION, II. Translation Greek".

The treatment of the cases in question is largely based on a series of commentaries with good philological notes. The volumes that were consulted most frequently are listed in the section entitled "Bibliography. II. Commentaries". Only rarely has an explicit reference to one of them been given in situ. The same can be said of most of the lexica, such as J.F. SCHLEUSNER's Thesaurus and MM. References have been made systematically to TWNT and NIDNTT when these works appear to provide more or less substantial information on the use of a word in the OT.

D. Revision and Systematization

In addition to the general revision work that went into the production of this one-volume edition, the whole lexicon had to be made uniform. The first volume had to be systematically adjusted to the methodological principles used for the second.

- Following the policy of LSJ, the lemmata of verbs are listed in their active voice ending, even in those cases where the LXX uses only their passive or medial forms.
- Some extra information is at times given between brackets (e. g. particular context, grammatical usage, explanation of the term, etc.) with a view to helping translation.
- In order to introduce more clarity into the data following the lemmata, certain subdivisions have been made. The first type of subdivision concerns the voice of verbs. In this case, their translation equivalents have been grouped together under the headings: A (active voice), M (medial voice) and/or P (passive voice). The second type concerns meaning, especially in the case of those lemmata that require a lengthier treatment. E.g. sub ἐξαίρω, while the first paragraph offers the literal meaning of the verb, i. e. "to lift up", the other paragraphs show that the verb is also used metaphorically meaning "to extoll" (in a positive sense) and "to make high-flower, to make stilted" (in a negative sense).

E. The Target Group

In view of the lack of a contemporary lexicon of the LXX, the present work is aimed at a large group of scholars in many disciplines: students and specialists in the OT and more particularly in the LXX, the NT, Intertestamental Literature, Patristics, Jewish Hellenism, and Greek linguistics. Its limited scope and its practical features make it more directly useful for students in these fields. Furthermore, its treatment of special cases as well as its bibliography should be of interest to more advanced scholars. The ideal user of the lexicon should have some knowledge of both Greek and Hebrew in order to understand the compact presentations of the cases in which the Greek differs or seems to differ from the Hebrew of the MT.

II. TRANSLATION GREEK

When preparing a lexicon of the LXX, one is faced with several basic questions related to the fact that most of the books of the LXX are translations. This lexicon is supposed to give the meaning, i.e. the English translation equivalents, of the words used in the LXX. However, which meaning should be given, the one intended by the translator or the one understood by the readers for whom it was intended? Is reference to be made to the underlying Hebrew or Aramaic, or is the search for meaning to be confined to the Greek? These questions are interrelated and connected with the special character of "Septuagint Greek".

A. The Greek of the Septuagint

1. Which Type of Greek?

An impressive series of recent publications tries to define the special character of the Greek of the LXX.²⁶ Most of the authors are agreed that it reflects the Koine language and not a Jewish-Greek dialect nor a supernatural “language of the Holy Spirit”. The argumentation of J.A.L. LEE appears to be particularly convincing. He and many others are the spiritual inheritors of the thoughts and views of G.A. DEISSMANN²⁷ who drew attention to the correspondences between the vocabulary of the papyri and that of biblical Greek. It should not be forgotten, however, that DEISSMANN’s attention was focused on the Greek of the NT.

Nevertheless, when he dealt with the LXX he did not fail to notice the Semitic influence which is naturally most pronounced in those books that were not originally written in Greek but translated from a Hebrew or Aramaic original. When we discuss the nature of “Septuagint Greek” and “translation Greek” in the following pages we shall refer to the typical characteristics of the Greek used in the given category of books. Although it may be based on it, LXX Greek cannot simply be characterized as Koine Greek. It is first of all translation Greek.²⁸ This is most obvious at the level of syntax and style. The order of the words in the translation most often closely sticks to that of the Hebrew original. In fact, in many passages, the Hebrew and the Greek can be put in parallel columns, word by word.²⁹ The result is that the syntax of the LXX is Hebrew rather than Greek.³⁰ No classical author and hardly any author using Koine Greek would have written sentences the way they are composed in the first Bible translation. The translators obviously paid more attention to the Semitic source language than to the Greek target language. They did not try to create an artistic Greek literary composition, but chose to stay as closely as possible with the Semitic original. This led to what is usually called “Hebraisms” or “Semitisms”, which might be better referred to as “translationisms”.³¹

Of course, these remarks do not apply equally to all parts of the LXX. The first Bible translation displays a great variety in style and vocabulary and in the translation technique adopted. The typical traits of translation Greek are to be found especially in those books that are translated in a literal way.

EVANS quotes this paragraph and then misinterprets my words, making me “assert generally that LXX syntax equals Hebrew syntax”. In another contribution I will provide a more substantial refutation of his allegations.

³¹ For a good classification of these “Hebraisms”, see SOLLAMO 1979, 6–7.

Although less blatant, the translation character of the Greek of the LXX can also be detected at the level of its vocabulary. Admittedly, the translators appear most often to have carefully selected Greek terms, the semantic range of which more or less covered that of the Hebrew equivalent(s). They did not coin a new dialect nor did they use a Jewish-Greek jargon. Pure neologisms are not abundant. When some terms of the LXX seem to be rarely, if ever, used in classical Greek, they are often attested in the Koine language of the papyri. Sometimes the translators had problems finding an adequate equivalent. In several instances they appear to have forged new words. For this purpose they often added prefixes to existing words, or they simply transliterated the Hebrew. On other occasions they chose a purely mechanical translation, or a “translation of embarrassment” using a colourless Greek word, such as διάστημα, when rendering a variety of technical Hebrew expressions.³²

For some Hebrew words, the translators employed a stereotyped Greek equivalent, disregarding the context and semantic nuances. Thus, שׁוֹלֵם was translated as a rule by εἰρήνη, although the semantic field covered by the Greek word does not coincide with that of the Hebrew. It is well known that this led to Greek sentences which must have been hard to understand for native Greek speakers, e.g. when David speaks of the εἰρήνην τοῦ πολέμου (the peace of the war) in 2 Sam 11,7.³³

This leads us to another observation that is usually overlooked in this context. If one accepts that the Greek of the LXX is translation Greek, then one must also admit that the deviations between the Hebrew and the Greek are remarkable. Considering that the translators tried to render the Semitic text as faithfully as possible, one is obliged to explain why their translation deviates from it whenever it does. These differences may actually have been occasioned by a series of facts. We confine ourselves here, however, to the level of the vocabulary. The translators may have worked with a Vorlage which differed from the MT. Alternatively, they may have misunderstood the Hebrew, or understood it in a way differing from that of the Masoretes. For instance, the identification of the root of some Hebrew word forms may have caused problems. One should not forget that the translators worked with unvocalized texts and that, in fact, the Masoretes, likewise, had to deal with similar difficulties. The Masoretic solution is not necessarily the best. Other differences between the Greek and the Hebrew may have been caused by the translator’s tendency to adapt the text to his public and their cultural environment. It may also have been the case that he may have wished to bring in his own theological views or that the Greek may have been corrupted in the process of copying.

What implications does this have for the public using the translation? Were they aware of the translation character of its Greek and of its deviations from the original?

3. The Public and Their Language³⁴

We do not know much about the public for which the translation was created. If one believes the letter of ARISTEAS, the Greek Pentateuch was made by Palestinian Jews for a scholarly purpose: for the library of the Ptolemaic king. As a matter of fact, however, it was probably made for the Jews living in Egypt in the 3rd c. BCE. Which language did they speak and write? The papyri suggest that they used the Greek of the Koine type. Some may have had a certain knowledge of Hebrew or Aramaic or both.³⁵ The translation may have helped them in their understanding of the Scriptures written in Hebrew and Aramaic.

There is a reasonable chance, however, that most of the early users read the LXX as a Greek text, without any knowledge of the Hebrew original. This is certainly the case when one turns to the members of the early Christian church for whom the LXX became their canonical writings.

³⁵ About the question of bilingualism, see VERGOTE 1945 and SILVA 1980.

The LXX was also used by the Jews in Palestine. The scrolls found in Qumran are a conclusive witness to this. They appear to have read the LXX in the light of the Hebrew text and revised it accordingly.³⁶ Some people maintain that the Jews in Egypt spoke a Jewish-Greek jargon. The evidence is usually taken from the LXX. We already suggested that no proof can be found for this. One of the strongest arguments against the existence of a Jewish-Greek dialect and its current use is the fluent Greek found in the originally Greek writings of the Bible. The Jews who wrote these books and who probably lived in Egypt, do not seem to have been influenced by a special Jewish-Greek dialect nor by a Hebraizing style or vocabulary. When we study the Greek Bible, we are an entirely new public. Do we have to search for its meaning with the eyes and ears of 3rd c. BCE Jews in Egypt, or in Palestine, or of the early Christians? Do we have to try to find out what the translator meant or should we read the Greek Bible as a timeless literary work in its own right, disregarding the author and its original public?

One possibility does not necessarily exclude the others. It may be interesting at first to try to trace the intentions of the translator, comparing his Greek version with the Hebrew text,³⁷ and then to study the interpretation given by the early Christian authors.³⁸ In a further step one may approach the LXX from the point of view of the Jews in Palestine or in Egypt in the early Christian era and in the period immediately before it, comparing the Greek translation with the Targumim and the rabbinic interpretations of the Scriptures.³⁹ Alternatively one may read the Greek Bible as a classicist, noting the parallels and differences with classical Greek authors. All these approaches can be labelled as diachronic. Alongside with or in contradiction to these options one may prefer a synchronic reading. This possibility is much favoured in the realm of the study of the Hebrew Bible and its modern translations which are read as artistic compositions with rhetorical critical or structuralistic or wholistic or similar methods. Why would it not be possible to do the same with the LXX?

4. The Septuagint, a Literary Work?

There is a tendency nowadays to take the LXX more seriously than before.⁴⁰ This does not necessarily mean, however, that scholars who support this tendency defend the LXX as a literary work in its own right. They first of all react against those who tend to use it as “a grab-bag for conjectures and for rewriting the MT”.⁴¹ In many instances, the LXX constitutes the earliest commentary on the Hebrew Scriptures. Moreover, it contains the canonical Scriptures of the early Christian church. Whether it can or should be considered as a literary work which should be studied without reference to its historical situation, is a different question.⁴² Its artistic value differs from book to book. In many cases it has its own message. The special characteristics of that message are most clearly pronounced in those books which were translated in a rather free way, such as Isaiah, and in books that were originally written in Greek. Studies of the LXX as an independent literary work are not numerous. For Isaiah, reference can be made to J. COSTE's study of Is 25,1-5, for Hosea to those of T. MURAOKA, and for Job to those of C. COX.⁴³ Both J. COSTE and T. MURAOKA admit, however, that the specificity of the contents of the LXX is best recognized in comparison with the MT. In practice this means that, even when the LXX is studied for its own sake, it still should not be forgotten that it is for the most part a translation.

⁴² The strongest advocate of this approach seems to be C. COX. See COX 1987, 79–89 and his paper read at the IOSCS congress Leuven 1989. T. MURAOKA also strongly affirms that the Septuagint should be studied as an independent work in its own right. He immediately adds, however: “of course with constant reference to the original work” (MURAOKA 1982, 25).

B. The Lexicon and the Meanings of the Greek Words of the Septuagint

Armed with these considerations on the specific character of the Septuagint and its translation Greek, we now return to our questions about the typical features of a lexicon intended as a tool for the study of that work. A good guide for such thoughts is offered by the proceedings of the symposium on LXX Lexicography held in Melbourne.⁴⁴

It is surprising that several leading authorities, who seem to accept that a lexicon of the LXX should first of all give the meaning intended by the translator, nevertheless hold that it should not, or rarely, refer to the Semitic text. Let us have a closer look at the problem.

If one decides that such a lexicon is to render the meaning of the words as they were read and understood by a public that had no knowledge whatsoever of the Semitic text underlying the Greek, perhaps no reference should be made to the Hebrew. However, if one opts for the other approach which seeks for the meaning intended by the translator, then this view can hardly be adopted. Indeed, the translator appears initially to have wished to render his Vorlage as faithfully as possible. He wanted his translation to communicate the same message as that intended by the original text. When deviations occur, it seems reasonable that they should be indicated in the lexicon.

That does not mean that the lexicon should follow the example of its illustrious predecessor composed by J.F. SCHLEUSNER, or his source, the Novus thesaurus philologicus of J. BIEL.⁴⁵ These works are Hebrew rather than Greek lexica. First of all, attention is to be given to the meaning of the Greek word in its context. When deviations from the Hebrew occur, however, and when these can be explained at the level of the morpheme, this should be noted. We have opted for a non-directive indication, showing how the deviations could be explained, but not pointing at the party responsible for them. For instance, when a metathesis appears to have occurred between a ט and a נ, this is indicated without saying which direction the metathesis should be read. A distinction can be made between several types of cases. Before attempting a summary, however, it should be noted that the distinctions between them are sometimes rather artificial, and that several types may occur simultaneously.

1. In a first series of cases, the translator appears to have read the same unvocalized word or morpheme in his Vorlage which we can find in our printed Hebrew Bibles, although he gave it an interpretation differing from that found in the vocalized MT.

1.a. He had to identify the root from which a noun or verb was derived. Thus when he found אֶרְאֵי he had to decide whether this form came from the verb אָרַא (to fear) or from אָרַא (to see). Many of these cases were caused by verb forms derived from weak verbs, the root of which was hard to identify in an unvocalized text. Often only two consonants must have been easily recognisable. The editors of the MT and the LXX translators made a different guess at the third consonant. In this rubric we may place the so-called etymologising renderings.⁴⁶

⁴³ See note 12.

⁴⁴ T. MURAOKA (ed). Melbourne Symposium on Septuagint Lexicography (SCS, 28), Atlanta, GA, Scholars, 1990.

⁴⁵ See our contribution on J.F. SCHLEUSNER and the Lexicon of the Septuagint, in ZAW 102 (1990) 256–262.

⁴⁶ TOV 1987, 138.

1.b. The translator also had to decide how the morpheme was composed. Indeed, in some cases, prefixes and suffixes were confused with parts of the root or of the main word, e.g. in Nah 2,2, the LXX has ἐκ θλίψεως, which would refer back to the Hebrew מִצְרָה (from affliction), whereas the MT reads מצורה (fortification).

1.c. Similarly, the translator had to decide how the words were split. In the handwritten texts, the blanks between the respective words were not always equally clear. One or more letters which are written in the MT at the end of a word are reflected in the translation as belonging to the beginning of the following word, or vice versa.⁴⁷ An example may be found in Gn 49,19-20, where the translator read the Hebrew mem as a suffix at the end of the last word of verse 19, whereas the MT understood it as a prefix at the beginning of the first word of a new verse. The LXX has “... αὐτῶν κατὰ ποδάς. Ασηρ ...”, which means “... their heel. Asher ...” (עֲקֵב מַאֲשֶׁר), while the MT reads: עֲקֵב מַאֲשֶׁר (“... heel. Of Asher ...”).

1.d. Even when the translator read the same vocalisation as the redactor or copyist of MT, he had to decide which semantic interpretation he wished to give to each word. Some words had a wide range of meanings which could hardly be covered by one and the same Greek equivalent. Of course, the context could help him. In some cases, however, he seems to have understood the context in a different way from that found in the MT. This could lead to the choice of a translation which does not agree with the MT. We may refer to Jer 2,36 where τοῦ δευτερῶσαι (to repeat) is a correct translation of the Hebrew infinitive לשנות taken out of its context. There is another meaning of the same word that fits the context of the MT much better, i.e. to change (one's ways). It is often difficult to decide whether or not these cases should be included among the lexicographical differences between the LXX and the MT.

2. In a second series of cases, the translator may have read or heard a morpheme that slightly differed from that in the unvocalized MT.⁴⁸ This may be due to a mistake. It is not always clear to whom the mistake is to be attributed. It may have been caused by the translator or by a copyist of the Hebrew text. Some instances may not have to be evaluated as mistakes but rather as interpretative changes caused by the translator or by the redactor of the Semitic version he was working with.

2.a. One or more Hebrew characters could easily be interchanged in the copying or in the reading process.⁴⁹ The classical example is that of the confusion between נ and כ. This explains why the MT in Ez 17,7 mentions one eagle נְשֵׁר אֶחָד whereas the LXX has ἀετὸς ἔτερος. (נְשֵׁר אֶחָר).⁵⁰

2.b. In a similar way, a metathesis could occur. This seems to have happened in Jb 36,15 where צחַל (to set free, MT) and צחַל (to afflict, LXX) were confused.

2.c. Matres lectionis could be added or dropped, which could lead to different vocalizations and interpretations.

Several of these phenomena could occur simultaneously in the same word or context. For an example we may refer to Nah 2,12: τοῦ εἰσελθεῖν (ל/בּוֹא, to go) for MT לְבִיא (lion). Whereas the MT read one word, the translator split it into a prefix and a verb. Moreover, he seems to have read a ה (vaw) where the MT has a י (yod). Another example is to be found in Hos 11,4. The end of the verse is perhaps most illustrative. The LXX has: δυνήσουμαι αὐτῷ corresponding to the Hebrew: אָוָכֶל לוּ, in which the verb is derived from יָבַל. The meaning is: I shall prevail over him. The MT, however, has: לא אָוָכֵיל : לא, deriving the same verb from

⁴⁸ For a good survey, see E. Tov, The Text-critical Use of the Septuagint in Biblical Research (JBS, 3), Jerusalem, 1981, pp. 195–205, and Interchanges of Consonants between the TM and the Vorlage of the Septuagint, in FS S. Talmon, Winona Lake, IN, 1990.

⁴⁹ A good survey is given in Tov 1981, 195–212.

⁵⁰ Another well known example can be seen in Gn 22,13 where the LXX reads κριός εἷς אֶיל אֶחָד one ram for MT אֶיל אֶחָר אֶיל a ram behind (him).

אכְל and splitting the expression over two sentences. In translation this can be rendered as follows: *I fed. Not... In this case the words and even the sentences are split differently in the MT and in the Greek. Moreover, the MT seems to have read one more mater lectionis than the LXX. The translator appears also to have interpreted the words differently.*

3. A third series of differences may have resulted from internal Greek corruptions. One Greek word was replaced by another similar word through metathesis, or through the confusion of characters, or through some other mechanism. Often the corruption led to a deviation from the Hebrew. In a lexicon based on the edition of A. RAHLFS, examples of this kind will be rare. Indeed, in his eclectic text, A. RAHLFS frequently corrected the Greek. Nevertheless, the examples are not altogether absent. Thus, in 2 Chr 30,8 δότε δόξαν (give glory) probably originally read δότε δεξιάν as a translation of Hebrew תַּנֵּן יָד (give a hand, yield yourselves). A similar case can be found in the older Greek manuscripts of Is 62,8 reading κατὰ τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ (for his glory) for the Hebrew בִּימִינָה (by his right hand). In this case, however, both A. RAHLFS and J. ZIEGLER prefer the version of the hexaplaric manuscripts which corrected the text towards the MT and read κατὰ τῆς δεξιᾶς (by his right hand).

4. Not only the differences should be noted. Incomprehensible Greek words which are in fact transliterations must also be pointed out. Thus, γαβῖς = גַּבְיוֹשׁ (crystal) in Jb 28,18. Moreover, in several instances, a well-known Greek word does not seem to make sense in its context. A comparison with the Hebrew or Aramaic reveals that the translator used a stereotype rendering of the Semitic equivalent. The semantic range of that equivalent was either larger than or simply did not completely coincide with the chosen Greek term. E. TOV has treated these instances in a balanced way.⁵¹ They should where possible be mentioned in the lexicon. In our succinct version we often simply give the meaning of the Hebrew and refer to the literature dealing with the case.

Furthermore, we observe that in order to render the Hebrew the translators sometimes created new expressions.⁵² These neologisms were often derived from existing words, e.g. ἀβατώ from ἄβατος. Information concerning these neologisms certainly has its proper place in a lexicon of LXX Greek. However, it is not always easy to reach certainty in these matters. A word which may seem to be a neologism in the LXX may actually be attested in the Koine Greek of earlier papyri.⁵³ In the present lexicon we indicate the neologisms without trying to be exhaustive. It is more important, however, that an adequate translation equivalent or interpretation is given. Similar problems exist in the area of “Semitisms” or “translationisms”. They are not always easy to identify unambiguously. Moreover, they are more current at the level of syntax and expressions than at the level of individual words. We have already dealt briefly with these phenomena above. In our lexicon some of the most pregnant examples are indicated as Greek expressions giving a literal rendition of the Hebrew. This is done, for example, by the abbreviation “semit.”, or by means of a reference to the Hebrew, e.g. θανάτῳ ἀποθανεῖσθε for MT מוֹת תָּמוֹת you shall surely die Gn 2,17.

C. Conclusion

“Septuagint Greek” is first of all translation Greek. Any lexicon of the LXX should, therefore, refer to the Semitic original, at least in those cases where the deviations between a Greek word and its Semitic equivalent can be explained at the level of the morphemes, but also when the Greek words as such are incomprehensible because they are transliterations or because they adopted the meaning of the underlying Hebrew or Aramaic.

- Greek verbs preceded by a hyphen (-) representing the prefix, are verbs of which the simple form does not exist. Therefore it is listed without translation and without statistics, but it is mentioned to refer to its compounds. E.g. -πειρέω (→ ἐμ-).

- The arrow between brackets (→) refers to the prefixes of the simple form in the LXX. This should make it easier for the user to find etymologically connected verb clusters. E.g. -πειρέω (→ ἐμ-).

- A supralinear plus sign (+) placed immediately above the lemma indicates that the word occurs also in the New Testament. E.g. ἔξαίρω⁺.

- As a rule each lemma is followed by a code indicating its grammatical form. This defines the “kind of word” e.g. N for noun), class (1, 2, or 3), gender (M, F, N, respectively for masculine, feminine, or neuter) under consideration. When the noun is a transliteration of the Hebrew, only the kind of word is mentioned. See “ABREVIATIONS, II. Morphological codes” In addition, for nouns the genitive is indicated, and for adjectives the masculine, feminine, and neuter forms. In the case of those adjectives of the third class that have only one nominative ending for all three genders, only the nominative and genitive endings are given. E.g. ἄρπαξ,-αγος.

- The grammatical codes are followed by six figures which give some statistical information concerning the use of the lemma in question in the various Bible books. These five figures correspond to the five groups into which the books of the Bible have been subdivided, see “ABREVIATIONS, I. Books of the Bible” The figures are separated by a hyphen. The sixth figure represents the sum total of all occurrences. E.g. 50-87-105-65-70-377 (sub συνάγω). There are, however, some biblical books (Judges, Tobit, Daniel, and for parts of Joshua) for which A. RAHLFS edition of the LXX gives two versions based on different manuscripts. For implications hereof regarding the statistics, see “ABBREVIATIONS, I. Books of the Bible”.

◊ The diamond (◊) before a Hebrew word designates it as a “root” rather than the form in which it occurs in the text.

M M = masculine

- The second line provides the references to the first five occurrences, when available. E.g. Gn 29,1; 35,5; 41,44; 49,33; Ex 13,20 (sub ἔξαίρω).
- As a rule, the third line offers the translation equivalent(s) of the lemma in italics. When the word in question has more than one meaning, several translations are offered, each of them with reference to an example. E.g. robbing, rapacious (sub ἄρπαξ).
- The text starting on the third line may exceptionally begin with an equals sign (=) followed by a Hebrew word. This indicates that the Greek is a transliteration. E.g. χωμαριμ = כָּמָרִים.
- The asterisk (*) indicates that the following case deals with a passage in which the Greek differs from the Hebrew and in which the difference can be explained on the level of the transmission of the Greek text or on the level of the writing, reading, or hearing of the Hebrew word. E.g. *Ez 20,39 (sub ἔξαίρω).
- The abbreviation “corr.” suggests that the Greek word found in the manuscripts printed in RAHLFS may be corrupt. It may have to be replaced by the following Greek word which gives a better rendition of the Hebrew. E.g. *Dn^{LXX} 12,12 καὶ συνάξει and he shall collect corr.? συνάψει (sub συνάγω).
- The hyphen (-) before a Hebrew (or Aramaic) word indicates that the translator probably read or wished to read that word instead of the term given by the MT. E.g. *Ez 20,39 ἔξάρατε put away - עֲבֹר- serve (sub ἔξαίρω).
- The diamond (◊) before a Hebrew (or Aramaic) word designates it as a “root” rather than as the form in which it occurs in the text. E.g. *Jgs^A 7,22 συνηγμένη gathered - ◊ צְבָר? (sub συνάγω).
- The slash (/) in a Hebrew (or Aramaic) word indicates prefixed and attached elements. As a rule, prefixes and suffixes are marked only when useful for the argument. E.g. *Is 27,11 ἀπὸ θέας from (that) sight - מֵרָאֹת? for MT Mairot making a fire (sub θέα).
- The qualifier neol. at the end of a lemma indicates that the word in question is a neologism. In other words, that lemma occurs only in the LXX and in the literature based on it. E.g. δευτερολογέω ... to speak a second time; neol. For a more detailed explanation of “neol.” and “neol.?” see “INTRODUCTION, Contents”.

I. BOOKS OF THE BIBLE

A. List of Abbreviations and Groups

For statistical purposes the Books are subdivided into five groups of approximately the same size. The first four contain the books of the Hebrew Bible: the Torah, the Early Prophets including 1 and 2 Chronicles, the Later Prophets, the Writings without Chronicles. The fifth group contains the books of the Greek Bible which do not occur in the Masoretic Text.

B. Special Cases such as: Jos^A and Jos^B, Jgs^A and Jgs^B

Some books, or parts of books, occur twice. The reason for this is that RAHLFS edition comprises two versions of these texts, based on different manuscripts.

The rather confusing implications, especially in connection with the statistics and the five references provided immediately after the lemma, should perhaps be explained more fully with the help of two (shortened) examples:

καταβίβάζω⁺ V 1-2-6-1-1=11

Dt 21,4; Jos 2,18; Jgs^A 7,5; Jer 28(51),40; Ez 26,20

A: to make to go down to [τινα εἰς τι] Jgs^A 7,5; to bring down [τινα] Ez 28,8; id. [τι] (of anim.) Dt 21,4; to bring down to [τινα πρός τινα] Ez 26,20; to let down [τινα] Jos 2,18

P: to descend Ez 31,18

*Lam 1,9 καὶ κατεβίβασεν and she brought down תַּפְתַּח וְתַּרְדֵּל for MT

κατάβασις,-εως⁺ N3F 0-7-2-0-3=12

Jos 8,24; 10,11; Jgs 1,16; 1 Sm 23,20

descent, precipice Mi 1,4; falling down (of snow) Sir 43,18; id. (of hailstones) Sir 46,6 ἔργον καταβάσεως beveled work (temple decoration) 1 Kgs 7,16(29); ψυχὴν εἰς κατάβασιν desire to come down 1 Sm 23,20

*Jos 8,24 ἐν τῷ ὄρει ἐπὶ τῆς καταβάσεως on the mountain on the descent, on the descent of the mountain-
בָּמָדֶבֶר (בְּבָהָר)? for MT *in the wilderness, cpr. 7,5; 10,11; Jgs 1,16 ἐπὶ καταβάσεως at the descent-
בָּמָוֶרֶד for MT עֲרָד Arad

With respect to the first lemma, “Jgs^A 7,5” indicates that the word in question occurs in the text of Ms A of Jgs (but not in Ms B). In the statistics it is counted only once. A similar procedure applies to Daniel (Dn^{LXX} and DnTh), to Susannah (Sus^{LXX} and SusTh), to Bel (Bel^{LXX} and BelTh), and to Tobit (Tob^{BA} and Tob^S).

With respect to the second lemma, “Jgs 1,16” indicates that the word in question occurs both in Ms A and in Ms B. The word is counted twice in the statistics. As a consequence, the list of the first five occurrences is limited to four passages since the passage in Jgs 1,16 is counted twice. The policy is somewhat different in Joshua where sections 15,22-62 and 18,22-19,45 only are represented twice in Rahlfs’ edition. For these sections the respective abbreviations Jos^A and Jos^B indicate that the word occurs respectively in Ms A or in Ms B, whereas Jos^{BA} means that it occurs both in Ms A and in Ms B for these specific sections. In the latter case, the word is counted twice.

II. MORPHOLOGICAL CODES

This list contains the codes used in the morphological tagging of each word. The information is given on the first line, immediately before the statistical data.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

An abbreviated list of references to commentaries providing lexicographical and text-critical information frequently used in the lexicon is provided prior to the general bibliography. Full reference to these commentaries is marked by an asterisk in the general bibliography.

For references to the lexicographical instruments that were regularly consulted we refer to the “INTRODUCTION, p. I, n. 6”.

When publications are reprinted in collected essays, the reference given at the end of an entry is to the pagination of the more recent publication. Thus, with respect to κατάρχω, CAIRD 1969 = 1972, 133 refers to page 133 of G.B. CAIRD’s contribution in the collected essays edited by R. KRAFT in 1972, and not to the page of the original publication of 1969.

The following list includes the full titles of all the works referred to in the description of the lemmata in alphabetical order.

The asterisk refers to commentaries and studies providing lexicographical and text-critical information frequently used in the lexicon. With the exception of the commentaries to the LXX they are not, or only exceptionally, explicitly referred to at the lemmata: ABEL 1949, ALBREKTSON 1963, ALLEN 1974, BARUCQ 1964, BUTLER 1983, D’HAMONVILLE 2000, DHORME 1910/1926, DOGNIEZ 1992, DORIVAL 1994, DRIVER 1902, HARL 1986^a/1999, HARLÉ 1988/1999, HOLLADAY 1986/1989, KOENIG 1982, LARCHER 1969/1983/1984/1985, LE BOULLUEC 1989, GRILLET 1997, MCKANE 1970/1986, MOATTI-FINE 1996, MONTGOMERY 1951, MULDER 1987, OTTLEY 1906, PODECHARD 1949/1954, RUDOLPH 1962/1966/1971/1975/1976, SCHREINER 1957, SEELIGMANN 1948, SKEHAN 1987, WEVERS 1990/1993/1995/1998, WILLIAMSON 1985, ZIEGLER 1934, ZIMMERLI 1969

* The asterisk (*) indicates that the following case deals with a passage in which the Greek differs from the Hebrew and in which the difference can be explained on the level of the writing, reading, or hearing of the Hebrew word, or as an error in the transmission of the Greek text.

◊ The diamond (◊) before a Hebrew word designates it as a “root” rather than the form in which it occurs in the text.

* The asterisk (*) indicates that the following case deals with a passage in which the Greek differs from the Hebrew and in which the difference can be explained on the level of the writing, reading, or hearing of the Hebrew word, or as an error in the transmission of the Greek text.

◊ The diamond (◊) before a Hebrew word designates it as a “root” rather than the form in which it occurs in the text.

like its compounds, is a neg. part., meaning not; while οὐ is used in sentences expressing fact, statement or objectivity, μή occurs in cl. which express will, thought or subjectivity, ὅντα μὴ ἀποθάνητε that you will not die Gn 3,3 placed before the verb, μή denies a whole sentence, μὴ ζηλοῦτε θάνατον ἐν πλάνῃ ζωῆς ὑμῶν do not seek death in the error of your life Wis 1,12; or just the word preceded by μή, ἀπὸ τῶν κτηνῶν τῶν μὴ καθαρῶν of the unclean cattle Gn 7,2; μὴ ... πᾶν nothing, no (for classical μηδείς; semit., rendering Hebr. לֹכַד+ impft.+ לֹא) Jgs 13,4 introduces a question when a neg. answer is expected, μὴ δωρεὰν σέβεται Ιωβ τὸν θεόν; surely Job does not worship God for nothing?, does Job worship God for nothing? Jb 1,9 after verbs of fearing, μή introduces the dependent cl. and loses its neg. significance although the original meaning is still understood, φοβούμενοι μὴ καὶ τὸ ζῆν ἐκλείπη fearing that he would die 3 Mc 2,23

* The asterisk (*) indicates that the following case deals with a passage in which the Greek differs from the Hebrew and in which the difference can be explained on the level of the writing, reading, or hearing of the Hebrew word, or as an error in the transmission of the Greek text.

◊ The diamond (◊) before a Hebrew word designates it as a “root” rather than the form in which it occurs in the text.
